

CIRCUS ARRIVED O. K.

Four Trains, Consisting of Eighty-Three Cars Reached Greenville This Morning.

Rejoice, all ye small boys, likewise ye oldsters with red corpuscles in your blood, for today ushers in circus day—Barnum & Bailey's—altogether the greatest and grandest circus from the ground up, ever put together. Not only is the small boy vociferous in his greeting, but most of the older folks are tickled at the coming of the circus, although they won't admit it openly. Pa and Ma with a great show of reluctance have finally decided that little Willie may be permitted to visit the "stupendous, startling, colossal and magnificent convocation of wonders." But it would never do to allow their offspring to attend the show alone or in company with other youths who might be inclined to act in an ungentlemanly manner; or worse yet, acquire indigestion from an overdose of peanuts. What to do? If Pa goes with Willie, Ma must be left at home. Hence the only solution to the vexing problem necessitates the buying of 3 tickets. So don't be surprised if you see the whole family at the circus today. It's a regular habit. And after all, they'll be glad that they didn't miss the chance for the circus is an admirable tonic and helps to brush away the cobwebs from the tired brain and body.

The circus exhibited in Greenwood yesterday and came skidding over the rails to Greenville on four long trains totaling 85 cars loaded to the brim with circus good things. It is expected that before you read this in the Times that the entire affair will be safely ensconced upon the show grounds and the big undertaking of getting out the street parade will begin. It's going to be a monstrous thing, the circus folks say. For one thing it will be some two miles in length, and make good everything that has been claimed for it. Of horses there will be some 500 head in line, ranging from the sturdy Normans and Percherons to the lithe-limbed Kentucky thoroughbreds. A number of floats, typical of various foreign countries will be seen, and a generous display of open cages also. A long line of camels and elephants will tread gingerly by, and men and women riders attractively costumed will lend a fine dash of color to the cavalcade. There'll be lots of music from five bands, including a mounted cavalry band, while the sirenial callopes, without which the circus could not keep house will bring up the rear. Frankly, the circus people figure that the street display is going to have such a sweet taste in your mouth that you just can't keep away from the "big top" where the afternoon and night performances are to be given at two and eight o'clock, doors being opened at one and seven o'clock to allow ample time in the zoo, which is more than ever complete. It is here that one may see Baby Bumbo, the infant giraffe, born last January, and christened by Jane Northe Metropolitan Opera House favorite, Chimnie Fadden, a three-year-old chimpanzee, fine specimens of the innocents and hippopotamus, types of most of the animals slain by Roosevelt and a most attractive animal nursery including baby lions, tigers, kangaroos, etc. Promptly at two o'clock the doors will be on in the big tent, and almost three hours thereafter will incessant activity and one must needs be argus-eyed to cope with it.

The circus menu commences with a spectacular tournament full of color and kaleidoscopic beauty and is topped with the latest circus thriller, when Desperado makes his headlong charge from the top of the tent and alights upon his breast upon a narrow platform fifty feet below. Between these two items the audience will be founded amazed and amused by the multiplicity of features, most of them imported to America, which have been added into this year's Barnum show. The display is given over entirely to trained seals who present an amazing array of trained animal possibilities. Charles the First, a chimpanzee, rides a cycle better than most grown-ups. Musical elephants will interest the Berzacs' ponies and unriddable mules will make even a mummy laugh. La Belle Victoria is bound to astonish with her "stunts" on the high wire, while the riding, acrobatic and aerial numbers to be given are the pick of European circuses. Some fifty disciples of Billikin, yelet the clowns, will be given every opportunity to prove their worth as funmakers. Jupiter, the balloon horse, will make a friend of every woman in the audience as he always does, not alone because of his equine attractiveness, but for the cleverness he displays in one of the feature acts of the program.

Everything about the circus is high-class and worthy of its trademarked title. Tickets may be purchased throughout the day at Taylor's Drug store, at no advance over the prices charged upon the grounds.

DEATH OF A. M. LOVE.

A sudden swerve and lurch of an automobile driven by J. R. Smith of Leland, threw the only other occupant of car, Mr. A. M. Love, with such violent force against a large stone at the roadside that he died before aid could reach him shortly after midnight Sunday morning.

The two men had motored from Leland to Greenville early in the evening and were returning at a late hour. They had reached a point a little over half way between the two towns, about six miles from Leland, when, without a word of warning, Mr. Smith relates, the auto gave a quick swerve and lurch to the side, and while his attention was directed toward steering the machine back into the roadway, his companion was precipitated with great force to the side of the road. Mr. Smith did not get the car stopped until he had reached a point several rods down the road.

He hastily retraced his course and found Mr. Love lying prostrate, his head having struck an immense boulder at the roadside. Frantically he called to the injured man, and being a mile from any dwelling he realized that effort to get aid would be folly. With superhuman strength, born of fear for his comrade's death, and effort to save his life, Mr. Smith succeeded in getting the injured man in the back seat of the car. Two hours later he arrived in Leland, but the race was fruitless, Mr. Love having expired probably 20 minutes after the start from the scene of the accident. Physicians state that death was due to concussion of the brain.

Mr. Love was vice-president and general manager of the Darnell-Love Lumber Company at Leland and was a director of the R. J. Darnell, Inc., Lumber Company of Memphis.

Mr. Love's remains were sent to Memphis for interment.
